Across the country, communities are coping with the consequences of social injustice: poverty, racism, inequality, violence, isolation, and economic segregation. These challenges undermine the capacity and well-being of our nation's most precious resource, our children. Indeed, there is no more important endeavor than helping our children and youth become positive, productive, valued citizens. We start by making their well-being and opportunity to grow an unequivocal priority no matter where they learn, play, and live. We must be advocates for the systems and services that foster barriers and create genuine, sustained equity and opportunity.

As parents, caregivers, and educators, we also have a critical responsibility to help children and youth use skills in keeping them safe, understand the challenges of lived within a problem-solving context, and use themselves as active participants in our collective cultural commitment to liberty and justice for all.

Front and center is the need to address in a meaningful way the issues of race, privilege, prejudice, and power. NASP has developed and/or identified these resources to help schools and families engage in constructive dialogue about these issues and the ways that all of us can work together to shift the conversation from hate and violence toward understanding and respect to ultimately bring about positive change and equity to our communities. We will be adding to these resources over time.

Social justice is both a process and a goal that requires action. School psychologists work to ensure the protection of the educational rights, opportunities, and well-being of all children, especially those whose voices have been muted, identities obscured, or needs ignored. Social justice requires promoting non-discriminatory practices and the empowerment of families and communities. School psychologists enact social justice through culturally-responsive professional practice that advances the needs of all students, communities, and the profession as a whole.

NASP Condemns Violence Against AAPI Communities, Urges Schools to Reinforce Students' Safety, Well-Being

Bethesda, MD—Acts of violence against members of Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) communities across the country—punctuated by yesterday's shootings in Atlanta, GA—have escalated dramatically over the past year. Such violence is horrific and deeply troubling on many levels. Our deepest sympathies are with those affected by the trauma and loss. NASP condemns this hate-driven violence and calls upon our leaders to act now to stop it.

While the exact motives in the Atlanta shootings are unknown, they come in the wake of a wave of attacks on AAPI individuals, many of whom have lost their lives, including Vicha Ratanapakdee, Juanito Falcon, Christian Hall, and Angelo Quinto.
